Global Employment Strategy

GES identifies highly qualified individuals at ease working in a foreign environment.

We don't need to tell you that overhead costs for staffing an overseas office with American professionals can be astronomical: travel and transportation costs for both the employee and family members; leased housing; education fees for dependent children; and more. And this is after finding a suitable candidate willing to go to a foreign land.

What we do need to ask you is, "What would you say if we could provide you with a cadre of professionals with not only the talent and skills you are looking for, but are available to your organization without the high overhead costs?"

A New Strategy

The Family Liaison Office of the U.S. Department of State has announced an important new pilot program, Global Employment Strategy (GES), specifically aimed at identifying employment opportunities for the spouses of U.S. Government employees serving at U.S. Embassies and Consulates around the world.

Skilled Professionals

Architects, engineers, medical professionals, human resources and management specialists, lawyers, teachers, information technology specialists, are only a few of the skills and professions this highly-educated group of individuals can provide to your corporation. Many Foreign Service spouses add foreign languages to their resumes, not to mention experience living in diverse cultures and locales.

These individuals are looking for career enhancing employment; you are looking for ways to reduce your overhead. Does this sound like a match?

The key element is that Foreign Service spouses are already living Hiring experienced Foreign Service spouses will lower your costs of doing business overseas.

in the countries in which you have business! Global Employment Strategy will link your business needs with the goal of this highly skilled group of professionals to secure career-enhancing employment in the foreign country in which they live.
